TERRIBLE RAILWAY SMASH IN WALES.

Express Flung Over a Steep Embankment.

SCENES OF HORROR.

Six People Killed and Some Fifty Injured

MARVELLOUS ESCAPES.

Injured Soldier Shows Example of Heroic Unselfishness.

The Great Western line at Lougher, near Lianelly, was the scene of a terrible catastrophe yesterday.

One of the two engines attached to the up express jumped the rails while going at full speed, and dragged seven carriages with it down the embankment.

Two carriages were telescoped. Six persons were killed, and some fifty sustained injury.

Those killed outright were:—

James Lloyd, 30, Delebeche-street, Lianelly, the engine-driver; married, no family.

Fireman, John Harris.
Oliver Scullard, Parkstone, Pembroke, a passenger.
A gentleman, said to be a Nonconformist Minister, name not obtainable.

Two other passengers afterwards succumbed to their injuries.

The train is that known as the New Milford express. It starts from New Milford at 10.55 a.m., and reaches Lianelly at 1.5. After leaving Llanelly it receives an addition of carriages at Whitland Junction, and then proceeds to Paddington, where it arrives at 6.10 p.m.

It was three miles beyond Llanelly, and before Whitland was reached, that the disaster occurred. At a spot near the little town of Loughor the permanent way is carried along an embankment, rising to a height of a dozen feet above the surrounding fields. To the north hils rise, to the south is the sea at no great distance.

Along this embankment the train was travelling at fifty miles an hour. It was a few minutes late, and was endeavouring to make up arrears. The time was 1.15.

A HIDEOUS SCENE.

A HIDBOUS SCENE.

The seven carriages of which the express consisted were drawn by two engines. This was unusual, for until Whitland is reached one engine is generally employed.

Half-way along the embankment there was a hideous grading sound. The first, or extra engine, had left the metals, and was tearing up the permanent way. The great express engine behind was dragged into the same plight, and then the first monster, tearing itself away from the other, took a leap over the embankment into the field below.

below. It rolled over a horrible medley of smashing metal and escaping steam. Around it were twisted the telegraph wires that it tore down as it plunged. It was crushed into little pieces, and all that remained of it was scrap-iron.

The second engine mercifully remained on the track. Otherwise the whole train would have been dashed into atoms. As it was, a fate sufficiently terrible overtook the first two carriages. Amid shrieks of terror these two carriages were telescoped one into the other. Over the edge of the embankment they were hurled, and then lay on their sides crushed, distorted masses of match-wood. That anyone in them should remain alive appeared incredible, but the heartending cries that came from the wreckage showed that this was the case.

BODY UT INSTWO.

BODY UT INSTINO.

Those in the back of the train who had escaped without serious injuries scrambled madly out.

The fate of the driver of the first engine, named James Lloyd, was terrible. His body was cut clean in two. His mate received such injuries that he died soon afterwards.

Then the work of rescue began. From the debris men and women, suffering from avful injuries, were dragged. The most terrible damage had been done to the first carriage, and in this it was found that death had put an end to the sufferings of two passengers. At length the rescuers succeeded in removing from their cruel positions thirty of those who had received the worst injuries. These were lifted on to improvised ambulances, and taken, some to Lianelly Hospital, and some to Swansea.

Swansea.
Several doctors were on the train, and these were able to render immediate medical assistance.
After those mable to move had been extricated, and the lose severely injured helped to a place of safery it was all exact that bodies remained under the breaking of the axle of the engine.

the wreckage, and a careful search was kept up for a long time.

MARVELLOUS ESCAPE.

A passenger named Nicholls had a marvellous escape. He was flung from the window of the first carriage when the crash came, and fell on to the slope of the embankment. He got up dazed, but by a miracle unhurt. In his dazed condition he walked to Loughor, a mile away, and, to the astonishment of those who came running to meet him was unable to say what had occurred. Such an effect had the catastrophe on his mind. An act of heroism was performed by a spldier, Private Savell, of the Shropshire Regiment. His eye was smashed in, but he pluckly refused to be attended by the doctors, and pointed to his fellow-sufferers, who lay groaning and uttering piteous cries around him.

"Look after the civilians," he said. "I have been through the South African war."

SURVIVORS' STORIES.

Fighting Their Way Out of the Wreckage of the Train.

Mr. W. Wilkins, a former chairman of the Lianelly Urban Council, gave a vivid description of his escape to a Mirror representative.

"I was going to Swansea," he said, "and when we were just approaching Loughor going at full speed there was a sudden shock. Then I found myself lying on the floor of the compartment. There was a series of jumping jolts going on, and I knew that the carriage was bumping along the permanent way.

manent way.

"I struggled to my feet and found that the door of the carriage was jammed and that I could not get out. The carriage was lying tilted on its cide."

side."

Dr. Reid, a well-known Tenby doctor, said:

"I was injured severely about the head and had a terrible task to fight my way out of the wreckage. When I succeeded I dropped down exhausted, and was picked up and put in a motorcar that took me to Llanelly."

"SIGHT I SHALL NEVER FORGET."

"SIGHT I SHALL NEVER FORGET."

An hotel keeper in Swansea, who was a passenger, said:—
"The first thing I knew that anything was wrong was a peculiar shaking and sinking sensation. The compartment seemed to be going away beneath us. I cannot describe the feeling.
"I remarked, 'What's up?' and a gentleman at the left-hand window looked out and cried, 'Oh, my God!' He immediately jumped clean through the tottering carriage, and, I along with the other three occupants, scrambled after him.
"How we escaped broken limbs I don't know, We saw a sight I, for one, shall never forget.
"The carriages near us were still dragging, and one, about the third from us, had turned completely over.

one, about the third from us, nan turned completed, over.

"One was being splintered to pieces before our eyes, and the shrieks and cries of the people inside were fearful:

"I pray to God I shall never witness or experience anything like it again."

A dredger-man, named Perry, who also travelled car the ill-fated train, said to our representative:—

"Women and children were everywhere crying most pitifully, and I, with some other passengers, went up and down helping people out of the carriage windows.

"Many of them were seriously injured, and so I tore up my shirt and used it for bandages."

NO PROTECTIONIST.

Mr. Balfour Sticks to the Sheffield Programme.

FAVOURS COLONIAL CONFERENCE.

As guest of the Scottish Conservative Club at Edinburgh last night, Mr. Balfour opened the great autumn political campaign with a speech on the fiscal question.

He began by vigorously denying that the Conservative Party would enter into any compact with the Irish Party after the next general election

"Unionists are not to be bought," said Mr. Bal-

Plunging into the question of Mr. Chamberlain's policy, the Premier declared that he had seen nothing to alter in what was known as the Sheffield That policy was said to be protective. Protection, as he understood it, was a policy which aimed at supporting or creating home industries by raising supporting or creating home industries by raising home prices. That might be a good policy, but it was not the Sheffield policy.

Protection in its true sense had always been an admissible doctrine in the Conservative Party. Individually, he desired to say that he was no protectionist. He was one of those who thought that, under existing circumstances, protection was not the best policy.

Protection was not the policy he had recommended, directly or indirectly, either to his colleagues or the country, and he did not think he could with advantage remain the leader of the Party if it were adopted.

Whether Mr. Chamberlain's estimate of Colonial opinion was right or wrong, he entirely agreed with they must have felt for the patient's condition some days ago.

Lady Curzon was so well yesterday that her mother was permitted to see her.

Quite a large crowd awaited the arrival of the liner at Dover, and Mrs. Letier was the first to descend the gangway, followed by her daughter.

Within ten minutes of the arrival of the steamer the party were in the special train on their way to the castle.

Sir Thomas Barlow and Dr. Watson Cheyne have now returned to London, a fact which speaks reassuringly for Lady Curzon's good progress.

TSAR'S NARROW ESCAPE

Man Arrested in the Act of Placing a Bomb on the Line.

VIENNA, Monday.—A telegram from Cracow stated that the "Naprzod," the organ of the Socialist leader Dasegynski, reports that an hour before the train conveying the Tsar to Odessa arrived at Baranowicza, the officials arrested a man just as he was trying to place something resembling a bomb upon the line.

The man's identity has not yet been established.—Reuter.

SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT'S FUNERAL.

Everywhere the death of Sir William Harcourt has evoked sincere regret, and the stream of letters and telegrams of sympathy with the family includes an autograph letter from the King to Lady Har-

The funeral has been fixed to take place at half-past two on Thursday, at Nuncham, and the service will be conducted by the vicar, the Rev. W. H. Castleman.

SWIMMING CHAMPIONSHIP.

For the sixth time in succession J. H. Derbyshire won the 100yds, amateur swimming championship at Middlesbrough last night.
Derbyshire's time in the final was 60 4-5sec. P. Radimlovic, champion of Wales, was second; and W. Call, champion of Sheffield, third.

"GLORY TO GOD."

Stoessel's Eloquent Tribute to the Brave Garrison.

FANATICAL COURAGE.

CHIFU, Monday. - General Stoessel confirms the repulse of Japanese assaults between the 19th and 22nd ult., when the fighting was extremely severe

After the engagement Stoessel issued the follow-

Glory and thanks to God. Glory to our heroic garrison. Glory to Illmann Sychoff and Pogorsky. Heroes all. Glory to our chiefs and officers; and especial glory and thanks to our valiant volunteers, who drove the enemy from the trenches, destroying them. God has permitted us to repulse the enemy. Praise to God."

The volunteers were regulars who had been called for to retake High Hill under Lieutenant Pogorsky and Captain Sychoff.

The Russians calculate the total Japanese losses for four days at 10,000 .- Reuter's Special Service.

FANATICAL FIGHTING.

Garrison Reduced to Eating Donkey Meat

CHIFU, Monday.—Further details have arrived of the fighting at Port Arthur, which began on the

By nightfall the waterworks and the redoubts had been destroyed, being reduced to mere heaps of de-bris. The garrison thereupon fell back upon the main fortifications in safety under cover of dark-

The desperate determination of the Japanese to apture High Hill amounted to fanaticism. Their efforts never ceased for four days.

One battalion of Japanese, having retreated into valley where it was exposed to the Russian shrapnel fire, was almost annihilated.

Eventually the Japanese succeeded in placing one field-gun and two machine-guns in position behind a hastily-made barrier. Their tenure, owing to the fire from the outer forts, was very insecure, and when Pogorsky charged the tide turned-against them. One Japunese battalion was annihilated in the trenches, which the men refused to desert. Another detachment was driven into the Russian entanglements, where Sychoff's force was waiting for them, and completed the rout.

The Japanese made two other attempts to retake the position, but failed.

HEAPS OF MANGLED BODIES.

Some Chinese who had been engaged in burying the dead at Port Arthur say that the effect of the Russian shells and machine gune was terrific. The slopes of High Hill were littered with manglest bodies and severed heads and limbs. In one trench they buried 300 Japanese and 300 Russians.

The garrison now has sufficient food, but the tinned meat supplies are nearly exhausted.

Thirty donkeys are now being slaughtered daily for fresh meat, which is worth about 5s. a pound Eggs cost 10d. each.—Reuter's Special Service.

ALEXEIEFF'S FLIGHT AFTER DEFEAT

PARIS, Monday.—According to a St. Petersburg message in the "Echo de Paris," when Adapiral Alexecieft heard of the defeat at Liao-yang, he leigh Mukden in a train at full steam, and had all traffic suspended on the line, but, notwithstanding this, his train ran into an ambulance train, killing forty of the avenual of the results.

nis train ran into an ambunance train, kinding forly of the wounded men in it.

No change is reported in the position of the armies near Mukden, though there are daily skirmishes. Japanese reinforcements are artiving, and the Russians claim to have captured several

SHIELDING A FRIEND.

The fact has leaked out that Mr. Gurney, the Embassy official at Washington, whose fine for motor-scorching led to so much discussion, was not really the driver of the offending car.

It was driven by the young son of a friend of Mr. Gurney's, and Mr. Gurney assumed the responsibility, in order to shield the youth.

This has caused a revulsion of feeling in Mr. Gurney's favour, says Laffan.

WHO IS THE MAROUIS?

Blacksmith's Claim to Title and Millions.

NOVEL OF REAL LIFE.

Paris is just now in the throes of an "affaire" after its own heart-a duel over millions between a blacksmith champion and a Marquis.

The story of this strange business begins in a noble house in Madrid, the home of the family of Casa Riera.

Here lived the old Marquis of Casa Riera, a man of humble birth, who had won his way to great wealth and high rank. His princely fortune was then estimated at from four to six million pounds, and he had, besides, large estates and noble resi dences in different parts of Spain.

dences in different parts of Spain.

The origin of this man's vast wealth is not really known. Stories are told of a theft of a casket of priceless jewels belonging to the Queen of Spain. But these stories were not credited in his day by his superiors, for he was made Marquis in 1859, and became later chamberlain to the Queen.

Swift Vengeance for Infidelity.

About the year 1840 the Marquis, then a man of fifty years of age, was attracted by the beauty of the young daughter of a farmer upon one of his estates. The girl was but eighteen years of age, but the Marquis fondly believed that he had won her love.

but the Marquis fondly believed that he had won her love.

He was deceived. Twelve months after the marriage his beautiful wife gave birth to a black baby, the child of a negro cook in the kitchen of the palace. The vengeance of the Marquis, so the story runs, was swift and bloody. An affrighted attendant found father, mother, and child all dead a few days later, literally covered with wounds from a poignard used by a desperate hand.

The gloomy Marquis then walled up the windows of this Palace of the Calle del Alcala. He confessed his crime to the Queen of Spain, and lived out his life an exile from his native land. He took up his abode in a house in the Rue de Berri, in Paris, and for twenty-five years the walled-up palace in Madrid remained empty, a monument to his avenged honour.

panace in Madrid remained empty, a monument to his avenged honour. Passers-by, looking at the sinister place, called it "the House of Silence." The old Marquis lived a retired life in his Paris home. His age when he died on May 21, 1881, was ninety-one. He left a will, which provided that his vast estate should go to the eldest son of his sister, José-Maria Mora y Kiera.

Riera.

In the event of the death of this nephew it should pass to Alexandro, that nephew's brother, or, in the case of the death of both, to their remaining brother, Gonzalo.

José-Maria Mora y Riera succeeded to the vast estates, but he only lived fifty-nine days after his model.

Gonzalo never took even a legacy which was left him in the will independently of the succession. He is believed to have signed away his share to the present Marquis, who succeeded in December, 1881.

The Blacksmith Claimant.

The Blacksmith Chaimant.

The present Marquis has enjoyed these estates up to within quite recent years without the slightest let for hindrance. Any disturbance which might have been expected was disposed of by the death, in 1887, of Conzalo.

But in June, 1899, there comes forward with a most dramatic suddenness a blacksmith, named Pierre Riera, a remote cousin, who states that he is the rightful heir to the vast estates of the old Marquis. He says, moreover, that the present Marquis is an impostor, who has obtained his just heritage by a trick.

A preliminary battle soon took place in the French Law Courts. The blacksmith brought an action against the Marquis for the restitution of his inheritance in the Second Civil Court of the Seine. The first honours of the struggle were to the Marquis. The blacksmith at once appealed against this decision and lost.

action against the Marquis for the restitution of his inheritance in the Second Civil Court of the Seine. The first honours of the struggle were to the Marquis. The blacksmith at once appealed against this decision and lost.

This blacksmith is a strong, tall, swarthy man of middle age, of a most determined aspect. His first defeat only excited his arbour for the fray, and he set himself to organise a veritable campaign. His first ally in this fight was the Abbé Gound.

The blacksmith was poor, and it needed money to grapple with so redoubtable an adversary. According to the Paris "Matin" something like a syndicate has been formed, which will, however, content itself with only 11 per cent. of the spoils, should the blacksmith succeed.

It has spent £3,000 and has been working at least two years in constructing a case against the present holder of the vast estates. Either directly or indirectly connected with this syndicate are a host of well-known public men, some of whom believe the blacksmith's story and others of whom are actuated by a wish to see justice done at any cost.

The Count de Dion (one of the heads of the motor industry), M. Firmin Faure, a celebrated Deputy, and the League of the Droits d'Homme, are all giving the blacksmith something more than mere moral support.

This syndicate has carried the case further: it has, to a certain extent, investigated the claim of the blacksmith, and has strengthened the attack (Continued on page 10.)

teen, member of the choir at Smannell Parish Church, was going home to Enham when she heard a man coming in the opposite direction. The night was pitch dark, and as it was raining very hard Miss Lumley was holding an umbrella.

She had just passed the man when she saw a flash, and immediately felt a stinging sensation in the neck. She cried out, and ran to a cottage, where she arrived in a state of collapse, with blood flowing copiously from the back part of her head.

A surgical examination showed that the young lady had had a very narrow escape, and that a hatpin had saved her life by turning the direction of the bullet. The pin was bent and the bullet entered the neck, took an upward course, and emerged at the top of the head.

ELECTION WITHOUT POLITICS.

Personalities the Only Feature in the Campaign in Thanet.

"Politics are never mentioned in this election." "Politics are never mentioned in this election," said an election agent at Ramsgate to a Mirror representative. "The voters of Thanet are concerned about men rather than mensures."

This has become recognised by both candidates now, and everybody in Thanet knows that it is a personal, and not a political, duel.

Mr. King, the Liberal candidate, is going around the constituency as fast as his famous Darracq motor-car will take him, proclaiming for the cheap loaf.

notor-car will take him, proclaiming for the cheap loaf.

"This is a fine place for blacking characters," Mr. Marks tells the electors. "If some people could black their boots as well, how shiny they would be."

A Margate orator, Mr. Bishop, has offered, on behalf of Alderman West, £8 to a local charity if Mr. Marks can prove that the coloured front page of his election address was not printed abroad. Mr. Marks got an English printer's affidavit of how he designed, set it up, and printed it, all in London, and politely requests Mr.-Bishop to take the necessary steps to secure the payment of the promised £5 to the Margate Cottage Hospital. Mr. Harry Marks scored on that challenge, but his opponent threatens many personal bombshells, to be fired to-day and to-morrow.

INDIARUBBER EYE CURE.

Patient Describes How Dr. Smith Does Away with Spectacles.

Much has been said lately about Dr. Stephen Smith's "no spectacles" eye cure, and a Mirror representative has gathered some interesting par-ticulars from a patient regarding the mode of treat

"Strips of indiarubber are cut to fit the eye, which the patient closes while the indiarubber is geatly but firmly pressed against the eye-ball.

"This is done for two or three minutes at a time, twice a day, at an interval of twelve hours.

"I was cured within a week—no pain, no worry, and no speciales."

"I was cured within a week—no pain, no worry, and no spectacles."

We have received from the Rev. Vincent Smith, of West Ham, the following letter on the subject, which seems to support Dr. Stephen Smith's claims:—
"Two of the company of the subject of the subj claims:—

"Two of the patients shown on September 24 were my daughters. They were formerly short-sighted, and without spectacles could not read without considerable discomfort. The short sight is now gone, and their spectacles have been discarded with perfect comfort."

" £250,000 LOST."

The statement that Messrs. Yarrow, Poplar, had lost a large torpedo contract, by reason of their engineers refusing to work night shifts for time and a quarter, appears to be greatly exagerated. Yesterday an official statement by the naval section of the Austrian War Office was issued intimating that only the contracts for one torpedoboat and one torpedo-boat destroyer had been offered to Messrs. Yarrow, and that these, with their plans, were to act as models for the Trieste yard to carry out the bulk of the work.

The ex-War Minister has explicitly said as much in reply to a letter from Mr. Jeffreys, M.P., who desired an elucidation of the matter for the information of his soldier constituents at Aldershot.

Mr. Jeffreys wrote saying that he understood Mr. Brodrick left all questions of soldiers' dress to the military authorities.

Mr. Brodrick replies that that is quite accurate

Mr. Brodrick replies that that is quite an analysis.—

"A cap of this pattern was first designed and appointed for a regiment of footguards some months before I came to the War Office in 1900, and after the proper authorities had been consulted it was issued to the other regiments of Guards.

"I never saw the cap until it was worn by the troops. In December, 1904, the military authorities decided to make the issue of this cap universal in the Arme."

"It was not till six months later that the question came before me, and in answer to my inquiry as to the reason for making the change, I was informed by the then Commander-in-Chief that it was necessary on military grounds to supersede the 'Field Service Cap' by the present headgear.

"The flattering attention of those who have endowed the cap with my name is thus wholly undeserved. I took no part in designing or equipment."

MOB-LAW AT CITY TEMPLE.

Workmen Will Ask Dr. Campbell To Withdraw His Words.

The Rev. R. J. Campbell is being made to feel the full force of his diatribe against the working mer the tin force of his thatthoe against the working men of this country. Many of the leaders of labour have strongly repudiated Mr. Campbell's allegations. Now a modern application of mob law is to be resorted to. Arrangements are being made for a demonstration both outside and inside the City Temple, on Holborn Viaduct, on Sunday morning next.

The idea was originated under the Reformers:
Tree in Hyde Park on Sunday last, and a resolution was passed as follows:—

The scandalous statements emanating from the smug and uncharitable Nonconformists concerning the working men of this country are untruthful.

Another resolution ran:

That this meeting of British working men pledges itself to resent fallacious statements by irresponsible mountebanks against our honour, and further consents to appear on Sur morning next at the City Temple for the pose of asking the Rev. R. J. Campbell a questions.

Amongst those who will join in the demonstration are members of the Navvies' Union, the Amagamated Society of Engineers, the London Societ of Compositors, the Society of Barge Builders.

ILL-FATED COMMANDER

Is Drowned While Taking the Coxswain's Place on a Steam Picket.

The crew of H.M.S. Illustrious deeply regret the loss of Commander Melville, who was drowned while returning from Weymouth to his ship in Port-land Harbour.

It was a very dark night, and a gale was blowing from the north-east. Commander Melville left Weymouth Harbour in a steam picket boat belonging to H.M.S. Hermes. The boat weathered safely the rough passage between the harbour and the breakwater, and past the Dolphins. The Commander suggested to the coaswain that he should take the wheel, to enable the coaswain to see that the boats and lights were all right.

On returning to the stern of the boat the coaswain missed Mr. Melville, and whether he was washed overboard or missed his footing and fell into the sea is not known.

MORE LUCKY "MIRROR" GUESTS.

Two more 5s. prizes have been claimed by persons photographed at the Crystal Palace on Mirror Day.

Mr. H. Richards, 6, Gower-place, Euston-square, was one of the claimants. His photograph appeared in the Mirror on September 39, but it was not until the paper was sent him by a friend that he knew he was entitled to a prize.

The portrait of Mr. A. Aylesbury, of 83, Royal-hill, Greenwich, appeared on September 27, and on his application 5s, was yesterday paid to him.

SEEKING A CRIPPLE

Strange Story of Murdered Baby.

LAME UNCLE'S JEALOUSY.

The mystery of the baby murder, at 10, Bromleyroad, Lower Tottenham, is no nearer solution, and the perpetrator of the diabolical deed is still at large.

The child's crippled uncle, Albert Holmes, has been missing since the tragedy was committed, and the father and mother of the child make no secret of their suspicions that Albert killed their little one from an unaccountable motive of jealousy. He is believed to have stolen upstairs while the family were at breakfast on Sunday, and battered the child's face with a poker.

He then suddenly disappeared, and all efforts to find him have, so far, proved unavailing.

He was seen walking in the direction of the River Lea, and the river has been dragged, without success.

There are one or two curious facts in connection with the crime, which were communicated to a Mirror representative by the cripple's brother-in-

Addicted to Hypnotism.

"He went in for hypnotic cures," said Mr. Joseph Copeland, the father of the child, who had just come home from his ship, the Endymion, and was half prostrate from the shock.

"He corresponded with the Segno Success Club, of Los Angeles, California, which professes to cure by suggestion. He would sit for hours in a half-

"Lately there have been disputes between him and his brother-in-law, Tom. He would not try to get even the small amount of work which he would have been able to do, and Tom said he would have to leave the house.

"It was suggested he should try and get into the infirmary, and his reply was: "You want to get rid of me; if I do go it will be the worse for some of you."

Poison in Sweetheart's Stout.

"How he got out of the house is a mystery, for no one heard the front door go.

"The evening before the murder he was out with his sweetheart, and gave her some stout to drink. She complained of the ferry taste, and asked what he had been doing to it. He said; "Nothing," and, to reassure her, drank some himself, with the result that on his return home he was violently sick.

"His sweetheart and another lady who also had some of the stuff were so ill that medical attendance had to be summoned."

"Poison is suspected from the fact that he was

"Poison is suspected from the fact that he was seen crushing up a piece of paper, as if he had just poured the contents into the drink."

The cripple's description is given as follows:
Age twenty-four, height 5ft. 3in., sallow complexion, hair and slight moustache—fair—suffers from paralysis of left side, left leg shorter than right, left foot withered, cork elevation in boot."

A man, who afterwards turned out to be a stranger, answered so exactly to this description that he was kept under observation in a West-minster workhouse while Mr. Copeland was sent for.

dock at Southend-on-Sea Police Court yesterday on a charge of murdering her sweetheart, William Oliver, a young labourer living at Prittlewell.

She sobbed bitterly while her own brother recounted the circumstances of the tragedy. He said that on Saturday night the girl came with her young man to her mother's home in East-street, Prittlewell, bringing also her baby, which is eight months old. The man was mad drunk, and the woman the worse for drink.

As soon as they got in they began to quarrel, Oliver threatening to throw the baby at the girl, alleging that she had been unfaitfulf to him.

In trying to strike the girl Oliver, the witness stated, stumbled and fell on to her. She was cutting some food, and Oliver fell back, exclaiming: "She has stabbed me!"

The wound was bandaged up by a doctor, and Oliver returned to his own lodgings, but he died on Sunday in the Victoria Hospital.

The girl, who is it wenty-two years old to-day, was remanded in custody.

When, in a subsequent case, a barrister stated that his client, although an Englishwoman, had been so mixed up with foreigners that she had either never acquired or had forgotten her native tongue, the Judge remarked that he was reminded of people he had read of in the newspapers.

"They are found in the streets," he said, "having forgotten who they are, where they come from, or what language they speak."

In a letter from a lady, who had been warned not to ride in December for fear of a horse accident, the client asked, "Does this apply to driving, as I don't ride? It will be very inconvenient for me not to drive at that time, and I want to ask you if it is quite safe."
One client put the following questions: "Shall we get enough money to retire this autumn? Can you tell me about my sister's prospects, and is she likely to leave her money to me?"

The much-deferred trial of West End palmists began at Clerkenwell Sessions, yesterday, before Mr. Loveland Loveland, K.C.
But although the "Kerios," otherwise Charles and Martha Stephenson, surrendered to their bail, the third defendant, "Yoga," did not respond when his name was called. It was ascertained that he had been taken ill suddenly outside the court, and had had to receive the attentions of a doctor. So Mr. Gill, K.C., for the prosecution, proceeded first with the charges, under the Witcheraft Act of 1728, against the "Keiros," of having attempted to obtain money by false pretences, and of unlawfully pretending to tell fortunes.

The statute was known to lawyers as the Witcheraft Act, and dealt with the conjuration of evil and wicked spirits. The girl, Constance Kemp, took the words to heart, for, after going to a shop, she showed a packet to Ballinger, and said it contained poison, adding, "I shall be finished altogether with you by and by."

Failing to secure the packet, Ballinger informed a constable, who found it on Kemp's table. She said it was oxalic acid, and remarked, "If I can't take it I'll buy some more or hang myself." The magistrate at Highgate yesterday remanded the girl on a charge of threatening to commit suicide, and commented on the facility with which a girl could get "enough poison to kill half a dozen people."

ACROBAT IN CRIME.

Finger-print Sequel to an Exciting Chase

BURGLAR'S DARING FEATS.

A remarkable development has taken place in connection with the sensational incident at Margate the other day, when a supposed burglar shot a constable who was pursuing him, and afterwards attempted suicide.

attempted suicide.

The Scotland Yard authorities have discovered that the finger-prints of the man at Margate are in all essential details the counterpart of those of a burglar whose wonderfully daring exploits in the West End of London at various intervals during recent years have proved a sore trial to the police. Such was his agility and contempt for danger that he has been known as the "Acrobatic burglar."

The achievements of the "Acrobatic burglar" first received prominence some two years ago, when a series of clever robberies were committed at hotels and fashionable residences in the West End, the thief invariably climbing into the buildings by way of the rain-water pipe outside.

The burglar for a long time eluded the vigilance of the police, but one day, after getting a haul in Wigmore-street in a similar manner, he was captured on his way home.

He was found to be a young Swiss waiter, and was sentenced to nine months' imprisoment, afterwards being twice sentenced as a suspected person.

The man had been living in the neighbourhood of Tottenham Court-road, and in July has the called upon the landlord, after a long and unexplained absence, and asked for two trunks he had left behind. The achievements of the "Acrobatic burglar" abone, and asked for two trunks he had left behind.

As he did not recognise the visitor the landlord asked him to call again, but the man never reappeared. Curious to know the contents of the heavy boxes the landlord had them opened, when, to his attonishment, a mass of glittering jewellery and other articles—diamond rings, watches, operaglasses, and brooches—was revealed.

SHOT FOR AN INSULT.

Story of a Bullet That Rebounded from the Ground.

Charged with attempting to murder Alfred Ryder by shooting him with a revolver, William Price, at Bow-street yesterday, explained that while out with his wife and brothers, his wife complained of having been insulted by Ryder and another man, who continued to follow them.

As they approached their home, an altercation took place between the parties, and Price said he fired the revolver with the intention of frightening Ryder.

He held the revolver towards the ground, and suggested that the bullet rebounded from the ground before striking Ryder.

Mr. Marsham committed Price on the lower charge of shooting with intent to do grievous bodily harm, allowing bail.

HOUDINI REVEALS A SECRET.

Shows How to Escape from a Screwed-Down Coffin.

Houdini, the hand-cuff king, has been appearing in a new character at Manchester. After performing wondrous tricks himself he has undertaken to show how another man's tricks are done.

The particular trick Houdini tackled was known as Carl Mysto's escape from an iron-bound coffin.
There was a crowded house at the Salford Regent

Theatre to see Houdini reveal the secret of Mysto's

A coffin, said to be identical with that used by Mysto, was put upon the stage. Before getting into it, Houdini told the audience he was sorry to bring a coffin before them, but he hoped they should never again see a coffin used as an acces-sory to public amusement. He then lay down in the box and the maker of it drove in six long screws. Pushing his hands through two holes in the lid, Houdini was securely

A screen was placed over the coffin, and in the space of two minutes Houdini appeared bowing and smiling in front of the footlights. Then he got into the coffin again, and in less than a minute his head issued through the top end panel. The explanation was simple. Half an hour before the show began the screws which bound the panel to the sides were replaced by smaller ones that did not fasten the panel, which easily yielded to pressure from within.

When the trick was done behind the screen Houdini had time to replace the screws and panel and so complete the deception.

Previous to this Houdini had offered £300 to any-body who would get out of the coffin, if he were allowed to screw down the lid.

Hundreds of budding medicos have alrealy reached the metropolis, and inquiries at the leading hospitals show that at least 500 more contemplate commencing their five years' course this term. Instrument makers hail the return of the students with satisfaction. The opening of the session is to them something of the nature of a harvest, for each new student usually purchases a full complement of tools of his trade.

Sir Squire Bancroft, in the absence of Prince Francis of Teck, yesterday afternoon, at the opening of the seventieth winter session, distributed the prizes won during the past year by the students of the Middlesex Hospital Medical School.

Dr. F. J. Wethered, in an introductory address, said if embryo surgeons and physicians would pay more attention to athletic sports it would be of advantage to the community at large, and less would probably be heard about the physical degeneration of the race.

FOOLISH-NOT IMMORAL.

HERE is no doubt that the engineers of East London made a mistake in tactics if they declined to accept Mr. Yarrow's offer of time and a quarter for night work upon an important shipbuilding contract. By holding out for time and a half (i.e., half as much again as day wages) they have sent the work elsewhere—that is, if Mr. Yarrow could really have got it, as his manager contends. At the beginning of a winter of exceptional distress they may have kept a quarter of a million of money out of the pockets of London working-men.

But, although they made this mistake in tactics, it is very unfair to blame them, as many people are doing, for trying to get as much money by their labour as they can.
Isn't that what we are all doing? Why should working-men be expected to make themselves an exception to the general rule? It is foolish to lose a job by rating your own value too high, but it is not wicked, immoral, and disgraceful, as some critics of Yarrow's men appear to think.

The particular point these critics insist upon is that the working-man ought to delight in his work for its own sake. They denounce him for not taking an interest in anything but his pay and the shortening of his hours. But, as a matter of fact, is he permitted to take an interest in anything else?

In the days when a man was a shoemaker or a knifemaker or a boilermaker, and really made shoes or knives or boilers, he could enjoy his work. It was a pleasure to him to turn out as good a boiler or knife or shoe as he possibly could.

Nowadays his case is very different. He is employed all day, and day after day, in the mechanical manufacture of some particular portion of a knife or a boiler or a shoe. It takes seventy men to turn out a knife, for in-stance, each doing some little bit of the work and knowing no more about knife-making as a whole than he does about conic sections or

How can we blame men working under such conditions as these for concentrating their interest upon efforts to get the highest possible wages and the shortest possible hours? There is nothing else for them to be interested in.

THE DECLINE OF THE CIRCUS.

It seems hard to believe that going to the circus was once a fashionable amusement in London. Nowadays circuses are looked upon merely as the sort of thing for the people of Little Pedlington or Slocum-by-the-Sea. Yet there has just died a woman who made a great name as a circus-rider in London less than fifty wears are.

there has just det a woman who made a great name as a circus-rider in London less than fifty years ago.

How is it that the "sawdust ring" has lost its fascination? Entertainments far feebler than circuses are still well patronised. The average music-hall performance is to many people a much less tolerable pass-time than a good circus would be. We cannot flatter ourselves that we have lost interest in feats of horsemanship by growing more intelligent.

No, the change is due partly to the fact that circuses did not advance with the times. The only one of late years that has had any great success is Buffalo Bill's, and that has succeeded because it is not upon the old lines, Popular amusements, like everything else, must either develop or die. Circuses did not develop. That is why they are dead.

A THOUGHT FOR TO-DAY.

to treat books just like men—choose a, find out what they have got to lieve anything they tell us unless be true.—Voltaire.

MORNING'S GOSSIP. THIS

EW men, even in the present day, when the features of every celebrity are known to the general public through the illustrate-papers, were better known than Sir William Harcourt, but this very fact sometimes led to confusion. Not long ago Mr. Chaplin was announced at a wedding by a groom of the chambers, who thought he knew him by sight, as "Sir William Vermon Harcourt." Mr. Chaplin groaned audibly: "This comes of illustrated papers."

"Lulu" Harcourt will never be a great man like his father, but he is what his father never was—a man whom everybody loves for his gentle and considerate manners. He makes up for not being very "brainy" by possessing the most attractive and engaging personality in the House of Commons. "I can't stand Harcourt," said at Liberal once, meaning Sir William, "he uses such strong language when he disagrees with you. And, indeed, on one occasion in the House, he actually called Lord Randolph Churchill "a little ass" in a whisper everyone could hear. But "Lulu" (which is short for Lewis) has never been rude to anyone. He has his father's real kindness of heart, and the outward expression of it as well.

THE "FRIEND OF MAN" REVOLTS.

The Dog: I don't mind being the "friend of man," but if this is woman's idea of friendship, I'd sooner we were enemies.

[In America several silly women, known as "society leaders," gave a dogy dinner party and fed the wretched animals on ice cream, chocolates, and sugar cake.]

THE MIRROR UP TO NATURE.

"Last Day of the Season."

"Last Day of the Seasoa."

IT is not cold, out of the wind, and the sun shines now and then through a cloudy haze of silvergery. So there are still a good many people sitting about at little tables having tea, and even a few on, the sands, finding sheltered corners, or hiding themselves in huge wicker sentry-box chairs. But they soon get up and go, taking a last look round, and then pulling their wraps about them, and walking off quickly to keep warm in the chill air of late aftermoon.

Now after is scarcely anyone left, and the little chairs and tables are being packed up by a horde of willing workers. Down on the beach, too, there is going on a general pulling-down of the tents and pulling-up of the bathing machines. The shanties where they sold sweets and milk are rapidly reduced to heaps of planks. The pier is being locked and padlocked. No one will go on it again this year.

For this has been "the last day of the season, and for the next seven or eight months the huge hotels will be deserted, the trim villas have their shutters up, the long promenade echo only the footsteps of the fisherfolk.
Good-bye, sea! Good-bye, sands! Good-bye, splendid stretch of sky! You belong to summertime, and now the bony fingers of winter are already feeling for our luckless throats.

A MAN OF THE HOUR.

Mr. Harry Lehr.

I T was nominally his wife who gave the dogst dinner party at Newport, but no one who knows them will doubt that it was he who really got it up. He has a knack of doing offensively stupid things in a blatant, well-advertised

One of his very earliest feats was to arrange that

One of his very earliest feats was to arrange that a well-known woman should paddle in one of the public fountains of New York. Then he trained a monkey to imitate the habits of man. Some people said this was only returning a compliment, since he himself had so long copied the habits of the monkey tribe.

Mr. Lehr is very fond of dressing-up—quite as fond of it as are his monkey-lriends. He often paints his face and pretends to be a ballet-girl. Once he appeared in such a disgusting state at a "tramp dinner" (where all the guests were got up as road-eadgers) that a New York newspaper said "no one would ever have dreamed he was a gentleman." Some people said they never had.

When other pastimes grow stale, Mr. Lehs, can always be counted upon to amuse by capering about on all fours and barking like a dog.

He is a bright specimen of a fashionable American. Yet there are some of his fell w-countrymen who actually refuse to be proud of him. Strange, but true.

King Oscar of Sweden, of whom Mr. Adolf Beck has been saying such nice things to an interviewer, is an exceedingly popular, sovereign. He has plenty of dignity for state occasions, but knows well when to lay it aside. On one occasion M. Gaston Bonnier, the great French botanist, was botanising near Stockholm and met a tall old man sumilarly engaged.

The two got on very well together, and, lunch time arriving, the Frenchman asked his companion if he knew of an inn. "Come and lunch with ne," was the reply. M. Bonnier accepted, and presently found himself before the royal palace. "I am so sorry," said the unknown botarist, "but I happen to be the King of this country, and this is the only place in which," am able to receive my guests. Won't you come in?"

Mme. Yvette Guilbert is becoming quite Anglicised. Her latest scheme is to appear in America in an English musical comedy. Since her operation of a few years ago she is no longer the same person. In the old days she was a thin, witch-like person, always dressed in white, and her, songs were often of the sort which the modern girl does not like her mother to hear. Now she has grown quite stout and serious, and her songs are even more serious than herself.

are even more serious than herself.

Recreations she has none, or rather, what she has are part of her work. Her songs, writing, and reading take up all her time, and she writes nearly all her own songs. An extraordinary fondness, for tea is her most marked peculiarity. She drinks as much as two English women. She would probably cycle, but whenever she does so in Paris it gives such trouble to the police authorities to keep the crowds in order that she abstoins.

The "Grand Old Men" of the English and American stages will make their farewell bows very close together, for it seems to be quite true that Joseph Jefferson is as determined as our own "Sir Henry" to retire within the next year or so. Jefferson is much the older man. He was born in 1829, and has always worked so hard that it is wonderful he should still be so active in body and making a living. Healways had to rehearse a very great deal, and he used to put an immense amount of energy into his efforts to make a character his own.

Once when he was in lodgings in London, studying his great part, Rip van Wiskle, before a mirror, the servant of the house knocked at the door. He took off his false wig and beard quickly and opened the door. "If you please, sir," said the maid, "there's a lot of people outside who say they can see an old man in your room a-throwing his arms about and a-going on somethink hawful." The actor had forgotten to pull the blinds down, and his impassioned accents, as he recited his speeches, had collected quite a little crowd! Jefferson found hard work pay very well, though, for he made more money by acting than any other player of the nineteenth century.

Mr. Richard Bell, M.P., who has been cham-

Mr. Richard Bell, M.P., who has been championing the cause of the British working-man against the Rev. R. J. Campbell, knows what he is talking about, for it is not so many years ago smeche was working on the Great Western Railway asaguard. From guard he took a position in the Railway Servants' Union, and rose to be general secretary, later being elected to Parliament for that essentially railway town, Derby. He is not mach over forty, and has already carned the full confidence of railway men, as well as of his fellow-members in the House, who have not been slow to recognise his sincerity and keen business ability.

by searching out other heirs of the old Marquis and consolidating their claims.

In February of this year there appeared certain articles in the French Press which the Marquis considered to be defamatory. He was proceeding against two papers, when one of the journalist impugned rose in court and made this wonderful announcement: "You cannot," he said, addressing the President of the Tribunal, "allow the counsel of the Marquis Casa Riera to speak."

"Why not?" the President asked.

"Because the Marquis Casa Riera to speak."

"Why not?" the President asked.

"Because the Marquis because the Justify as he heard this statement. He stared when he saw his death certificate produced.

The presiding judge examined this document with more than a passing interest, and it is added to the number of other documents which were being used in the case. Within a month, however, the magistrate who issued this certificate, the only living witness, and several other persons connected with the document, were arrested in Spain on a charge of forgery.

"What did it all mean?" people asked uneasily. The friends of the blacksmith were ready enough to explain. They said that a man was posing as the real Marquis.

They said first of all that the present Marquis was not a person of high rank, that he showed himself at all times much more a man who preferred the life of a Spanish peasant to that of a nobleman.

Too Young for His Age.

Too Young for His Age.

According to his birth certificate, he should be eighty years of age, and yet he carried himsell with all the erectness of a man at least twenty years younger. That is their first count of the charge of personation against the Marquis. The second count, rests on certain certificates of birth and death, which have been brought from Spain, and of which the document cited in the Second Civil Court is a sample.

These documents are (1) a copy of the birth certificate of the real Alexandro; (2); a copy of the certificate of the same (1) a copy of the certificate of the six death and the certificate of the same coording to it, in the province of Barcelona, on February 19, 1878, without marrying and leaving issue; (4) a copy of a death certificate of the same Gonzalo, who died on November 5, 1887, at Madrid, married, and leaving children.

What do all these documents mean? It is better to take the story of M. Soulbre, an ex-Consul for Spain in the Par East, who has given many months to the case.

His story is this. The old Marquis was blind and deaf when he died, in 1881, at his Paris home, and he was also under the dominion of a steward named Mediano Foix.

He did not know that his nephews Gonzalo and Alexandro were both dead. And this fact was kept Attendation.

It is stated that this relative of the steward, a man born about 1845, who is alleged to be the present Marquis, was installed by the steward in the Rue de Berri.

the Rue de Berri.

He was presented to the notary, who made the will as Alexandro. He was also one of the signatories to the death certificate of the old man.

By this and other acts everyone was led to think that he was the rightful Alexandro.

Then José succeeded and died. The death of this man did not take place until six o'clock in the evening, yet it was registered in a notary's office two hours earlier. It was evidently, it is suggested, a death someone wanted to register as quickly as possible.

The false Alexandro succeeded to the estates and

The false Alexandro succeeded to the estates and title of marquis.

Then there remained the difficulty of Gonzalo, who, in any-case, had a share in the estate. It is believed that the steward found some means of getting a death certificate of a man who was not Gonzalo, but posed as he.

The present Marquis, it is pointed out, has never attended the Cortes. It is recorded in the Cortes that the date of his birth was May 22, 1845, and in the archives of the Legion of Honour it is given as 1843.

The same authority also draws attention to the

As 1893. The same authority also draws attention to the fact that the so-called Marquis has sent to the little church in Spain, where some of the certificates came from a gift of $24,009, and has intimated to the curé that parish documents must not be seen without his permission.

The arrest of everyone concerned in the death certificate of the Marquis has caused M. Soulere to take flight to some country which has no extradition treaty with Spain. It is alleged that already several people concerned in the case have been imprisoned, and that others have fled the country for the sake of safety.

Alliance with the Humberts.

Alliance with the Humberts.

Such were the facts which have filled the Paris papers and made the whole case one of exceptionally thrilling interest, when suddenly the blacksmith took the bold step of haying a charge of fraud against the Marquis with the police.

Public excitement ran higher than ever. Strange stories sprang up from every corner of the country. The strangest was that the Marquis had been allied with the Humberts in their gigantic swindle.

During the campaign of the indefatigable Thérèse even that amazon of finance had felt the necessity of showing her dupes large sums of money. It was stated that the heaps of bonds which she wave before their dazzled eyes were lent by the Marquis. When the swindle was exposed her flight to Madrid was supposed to have in this regard especial significance.

Another wild story arose about the dead man, who was supposed by the blacksmitht's party to be the real Alexandro. It was stated that the coffin was to be reopened, and a vista of a French replica of the Druce case was flashed before the eyes of an excited public.

This final stage of the case opened by a reference of the complaint of the blacksmith to an ordinary magistrate, but it was found that the powers of this official were too limited to deal with so complex an affair. At the outset documents in Spain had to be verified, and a magistrate was not equipped with the right to send a commission into a foreign land. The case was therefore transferred to a luge d'Instruction, M. Leydet, who was the chief judicial figure in the Humbert inquiry.

Blacksmith Before the Judge.

chief judicial figure in the Humbert inquiry.

Blacksmith Before the Judge.

M. Leydet's first step was to have the blacksmith before him. Pierre Riera, using his hard hands to drive home his points, laid succincity before the Judge the case which is outlined above. Then followed M. Pietri, or Falconnet, the editor of the "Etoile Francais," in which journal had appeared charges against the present Marquis. This gendeman described his reluctance to be led into an apparently hopeless attack upon a man of such power, but proofs had been afforded which he could not ignore. He gave some curious evidence on the attitude of the Marquis's secretary about the detention of certain documents and the relations between the Marquis and the Humberts.

There are two sides to rivery question, and it may as well be stated that the chief line of the Marquis's defence is that the certificate of the déath of Alexandro is a forgery. He appeared before the Juge d'Instruction on Friday last, and laid before that official a simple account of his life. Public sympathy was almost won back from his opponent as the dignified old man, wearing his rosette of Commander of the Legion of Honour, passed slowly up the stairs leading to the magistratey room. Something like a cheer greeted him as the dignified, wor out by his long examination. To-day the singularly-erect figure appears once more before M. Leydet, and it is whispered that evidence will be given which will plumb the depths of the sensational affair.

which have been sold to shopkeepers all over the country. It takes experts to detect their counteriet nature.

A Mirror representative presented one of the "made-in-Saxony" cards at the counter of a central post office and inquired why the stamp "contrary to regulations" was punched across the words "post card" and a 1d. extra charged. "The reason is a very valid one," he replied. "The fact of its foreign origin arouses the suspicions of the British sorter, and he tests it to see if its proportions are in accordance with the regulations, which emphatically say a posteard may not exceed 5½ in. by 3½ in. in size, nor be less than 3½ in. by 2½ in.

"This postcard measures 3½ in. in width—a mere | of an inch over the regulation size, and the sorter patriotically condemns it."

The mistake of measurements is said to arise from a miscalculation in the English system of yards and inches and the Continental system.

"The difficulty does not 'exist for clerks and shopmen. I mean the labourer class.

"We have already a number of workmen's dwellings in Ealing, and the intention is to build more.

"But there is no need for more. There are already nearly 500 vacant houses in the town.

"There is, however, need for proper quarters for unmarried men; and I have roughly drawn up a plan to accommodate about fifty. Each man would have his own room, plainly furnished, but there would be a common dining-room.

The Ealing Town Council is to discuss this revolutionary suggestion at a forthcoming meeting.

SMALL WAISTS AND GENIUS.

In England, France, and other Continental countries the tight-lacing periods of history have always been productive of the greatest genius; always been productive of the greatest genius; the loose-dressing periods the reverse. Bacon, Shakespeare, Drake, Marlborough, Thackeray, Dickens, Scott—to mention only a few names—were born when chroniclers and fashion artists reveal to us the fact that "women were never satisfied till they could span their waists," and, "whilst eighteen inches was the fashionable standard, many fashionable girls and women possessed waists fully two or three inches smaller." One is again seeing much neater figures, and corsetieres predict a revival of tight-lacing. Let us hope that this will mean a climb upwards from the abyss of commonplace, and a recrudescence of the brilliance which distinguished the Elizabethan Age.

Whatever can be the objection to men and women bathing together? I really do not know how to express my thoughts upon the wertched prudishness which seems to prevail amongst a great part of our population at the present time.

Prudishness is a crime—a crime against oneself and against others. I fully believe that there would be far less indecency and corruption if the sexes were, from childhood upwards, allowed to mix together, and play and enjoy themselves in a proper and healthy manner.

The position of our chairman with regard to the industrial position of women-workers is that, where they are employed on the same work as men, they should be paid at the same rate, and she has, in this connection, constantly pointed to the Lancashire textile trades, in which; owing to their magnificent trade organisation, this equality of wage obtains.

With regard to the shorter hours and meal times for women alluded to by you, I presume this allusion is to our work for the amendment and enforcement of the Factory and Workshop Acts. Robert Ferris and his cousin and junior, Stephen Lathom, are partners in an old firm of solicitors. Lathom—who is a handsome, recletes, and rather dissipated young fellow—betrays the fact that he has, as usual, been betting heavily and losing.

Then Robert Ferris tells him that the firm is roined and bankrupt, and install reproaches occur, for it becomes evident that Robert Ferris himself has been plunging most desperately on the Stock Exchange. He confesses that he has misappropriated the great sum of 600000, the property of Hildia Maxwell, a young girl, and an orphan, whose legal affairs have been in the Lands of the firm. Lathom, too late, is overshelmed by shane and remore, especially as Robert Ferris sevends to him that he, Ferris, and Hilda have secretly given their whole love to each other. The matter is complicated by the fact that a Hindoo, one Hushmut Bisram, who is the guardian of Hilda—appointed by he father, who has been an almost fanatical Orientalist—is almost immediately expected to cell and demand an account of the firm's stewardship.

Then Lathom makes the startling proposition that if Ferris will at once find the sum of 63,000 he, Lathom, will abscond and will affect to commit suicide. It is hoped by this means that all the blame may be taken off the shoulders of Ferris whilst it is shifted wholly upon the absconder, Lathom. The plan is carried out, and we then find Ferris whilst it is shifted wholly upon the absconder, Lathom. the outer door rings, and Ferris hastily pockets the revolver.

The newcomer is Hushmut Bisram, the Hindoo, who forces himself in and persists in mistaking Ferris for Lathom. After mutual recriminations Ferris strukes the Hindoo, and the two begin a life and death struggle, during which the Hindoo produces a murderons knife. Almont in self-defence Ferris uses the revolver, and Hushmut Bisram falls dead. Ferris at once makes a rush to the residence of Hilda Maxwell, thinking that by doing so he can always prove an albit, and he calculates that, as the murder took place at Lathom's rooms, the latter will be biamed, especially as the revolver has been left by the dead body.

After an interview with Hilda, Herris is at his own chambers, and here he is unexpectedly joined by one Mrs. Raycroft, a heautiful adventuress. She forces the secret of the murder from him, and then he learns that it was she who, thinking herrelf discarded, had, under the name of "Vashit, the Supplanted," betrayed the shakiness of the firm to the Hindoo. She offers Ferris wealth if he will leave England with her, and Ferris, whilst declining this, is just assuring her of his continued love, when Hilda Maxwell stands in the doorway crying, "Robert, please tell this youngs that—that I am your wife!"

Hilda faints, and during her period of unconsciousness Myra Raycroft turns upon Ferris. She demands that he shall purchase her stience, and because that in the future it is war to the knife between there. Ferris is left alone with Hildas, and he forces some narrotic drug in a liquid form between her teeth, for he has resolved that he will quietly smuggle her home and afterwards persuade her that the whole execut has been but an ugly dream that he has had.

Lathom takes the boat that crosses to France. The night is a stormy one, and, as Lathom is contemplating a moody-looking stranger, this man makes a spiden leap overboard. To save him is impossible; but, during the condusion caused by his terrible act, Lathom resolves that he will claim the dead man's luggage and let the authorites believe that the man who has cast himself into the raging waters is himself, Lathom. This change of identities is effected, and Lathom gees on to Paris. Buying a newspaper, he is horrified to read an account of the nurder at his own chambers, and to learn that he himself is branded as the murderer!

Lathom, rightened and horrified, fancies that almost every passer-by recognises in him Stephen Lathom—and a murderer. He secks a somewhat humble hotel. In the quiet of his attic he begins to examine the portranteau of the man who threw himself everboard from the Channel boat, and which he, Lathom, had claimed instead of his own luggage.

Then he finds, contained in a roll of green silk, a shivelled human finger, upon which is a plain gold wedding-ring. Besides this there is a large envelope, and 'in this a nearly-written document, couched in such terms as only an Oriental could employ, and plainly conveying some threat or warming to the person to whom it may have been addressed. Lathom's constrenation and horror are increased when he finds that the very envelope associated with these gruesome things has plainly marked upon the gummed flap the name of this own late form—" Ferris and Lathom, Bedford-row, W.C."

Lathom determines to go back to London to each his late farm—" Ferris and Lathom, Bedford-row, W.C."

Lathom determines to extent from him, she yet writes to Hilds setting forth the relations which have wubsisted between herself and Ferris. Then she writes to Ferris, telling him that she has done this, and when be, in an agony, seeks out Hilda, he finds that she has in a hurry left her home, giving no new address. He is staggering under this blow when he sees a newspaper placard bearing these words:—"Suicide of the Cravenstreet murderer. Body lost in the Channel."

Hilda calls upon Mrs. Raycorft, and this woman taunts her with Perris's falisity, displaying a great heap of jewels bought for herself—Mrs. Raycorft—with Hildá's money, the trust-money diverted by Ferris. Myra Raycroft tells the full story of Perris's Indany, and more than hints that he is the murderer of Hushhut Bisram. The interview of the two women is interrupted by the "Good Lord!" ejaculated Stephen, beneath his breath. His nerves, which had twittered from the excitement of his interview with Ferris and the jar of his fall, were still, as by magic, at the sight of this motionless figure. His thoughts rushed instantly to Ferris and the man that he had killed. A warm, protective instinct towards Hilda sprang up in his heart, for he felt that the presence of this fantastically attired individual could bode no good Like Joram of old, he asked himself, "Is it peace?" And reason told him that men of this race do not usually come on peaceful errands at such an hour. It was now long past two in the morning.

He hastily turned up the solitary gas jet which in the night time replaced electricity on the staircase. As he did so the stranger entered the hall and closed the door noiselessly behind him.

"What the mischief do you want?" asked Lathom. "Can't you see that this is a private nouse?" He wondered, as he spoke, how on earth the man had gained admittance, for Benson, the caretaker, who livelgavith his wife in the basement, was one of the most conscientious men in the world, and the safety of the property under his care a positive fethis to him.

In the gaslight Stephen could now see the unwelcome visitor very clearly. His eyes took in every detail of the sashed tunic of white jean, the loose trousers, the handsome, impassive face, with its curly, forked beard, beneath a turban of the green he abhorred. This hated colour of the turban was his dominant impression, but it was not till later that he remembered why this was so.

"Yes," replied the man, spealing English a little haltingly, "we know this house and those who live in it only too well." He came a little closer to Stephen, and laid a slim, brown hand on his arm. "You we also know, and this concerning you, that outside there is danger."

"What do you mean?" asked Stephen testily. He had all the large and signorant contempt of certain plases of British manhood for coloured peoples. Indeed, for Ferris's act he had a certain sneaking sympathy; the life of a native was a thing of little account with him, and the brute had come to browbest a white man. But the act had been treacherously done and concealed—that stack in his throat.

He shook the hand off his arm.

The Indian made a quick gesture of deprecation.

"You understand not," he said, still in that penetrating whisper. "You see not the danger. Are not you the man, Stephen Lathom, against whom the dogs of suspicion have been unleashed? Already, even now, the police he in ambush for you; even as soldiers lay an ambush round city, so are they set in ambush round this house. . . one step and?"—he made a significant gesture with his lithe hands, and to Stephen it seemed as though they held a rope.

"And you?" he asked, startled out of his composure. "How do you know this, and why have you come here to tell it?"

The mas suddenly salaamed.

"The master whom. I serve," he said, "is all-wise. His eyes are fars-seeing, even as the eyes of an eagle; they discriminate between the innocent and the guilty. He sent me as your saviour."

"Who is your master?" Lathom asked.

The man salaamed again.

One who knows your innocence," he said.

"See, look you, I speak in the confidence of my master, and he knows all things—the man whose hands are bloodstained, and of you, also, that yours are white, as the fleece of newly-washed ewes. He desires to save you for the greater confounding of the guilty. Outside are horses, a carriage, a disguise." Again the man lad his haid on Lathom's arm, and this time it was not thrown off. "You while, which were the said of the guilty outside are horses, a carriage, a disquise." Again the man lad his haid on Lathom's arm, and this time it was not thrown off. "You while, when the said of the police had failed to swallow the story of his suicide? The trick was a fairly stale one by now. He saw the tightening of the net about his feet. Once in the hands of the police he could have view of the held not one bon at which he cared to snatch, Yet, when this man spoke of danger, the air seemed alive with voices, which spoke of the delight of fife. Why should this man lie? Looking at it sanely, was it to be wondered at that the police had failed to swallow the story of his suicide? The trick was a failry stale come to browbent a white man. But the act had been treacherously done and concealed—that stuck in his throat.

He shook the hand off his arm.
"I mean," said the Indian, in a slow, penetrating whisper, "that your police believe not the fable so ingeniously presented. They know, so say they, the murderer of Hushmut Birstm, and they know, moreover, that he is even now within this house."
"The dence they do," was the mental comment. Aloud Lathom merely said, "Ah, do they? I am glad to hear it."
"Of a surety," thought the Indian, "they are possessed of devils, these English." And be crooked the fingers of his right hand, as one who would ward off the evil eye.

"I suppose this interesting information is intended for Mr. Ferris," continued Stephen pleasantly, "I shall see that he hears it at a convenient time. In the meanwhile, having delivered your message, don't you think you'd better go? I am anxious to shut up the house for my friend as I leave."
He spoke as he might have spoken to the inquisitive child of a neighbour, who, slipping away from its guardians, has run next door to pay an impromptu visit. Yet he was very far from feeling the sangfroid he displayed. Whatever had been his resolves and intentions, when he hurried hethals the back to England, or waited for Robert Ferris in the stillness of the room upstairs, it is certain that nothings was farther from his desires now than a collision with the police.

He took out a eigerete and lighted it with deliberation. His mind was working rapidly. What would best serve the man who was Hilda's husband—surrender or flight?

The Indian made a quick gesture of deprecation.

Suddenly, at the sound of his groam, g, it seemed to him that the place in which he lay was plunged in darkness. This change was in itself almost a pain, yet a pain which had in it something of heating. Gradually the aching of his eyes abated, he opened them, and as they became accustomed to this new condition he saw that he was now surrounded by a greenish twilight, similar to that strange light born of the greyness of dawn, which precedes the rosy breaking of the day. He made out in this twilight the nearness of figures, monstrous they seemed at first, strange and uncount as those "trees walking" seen of old by the man of Bethsaida, but resolving themselves gradually into the actuality of white-clad, stalwart, turbaned men.

as those "trees walking" seen of old by the man of Bethsaida, but resolving themselves gradually into the actuality of white-clad, stalwart, turbaned men.

The sight of them cleared Stephen's memory as a north wind clears a landscape of mist; he remembered now all that had happened, his interview with Ferris, the slip on the stairs, the greenturbaned messenger, and, accompanying this awakening of menory came a fear so poignant that it made him realise that up till that moment he had not known the meaning of the word terror, the terror which sends the cold wave down the tingling nerve, the fear of the vast and hovering—the unknown.

He utterd a cry and struggled mightily, so it seemed to him, to move, and at the cry the green twilight became blackness which pressed down upon him like a pall, and lifted, showing him as in a dream, vaguely a large room hung about with many draperies, and immediately in front of him a curtained partition before which hung strangely shaped lamps.

"Where am I? Why am I here?" he heard his voice ask, as from a distance.

"Ah, he speaks," said one man to another; "the light of reason returns to him." He moved forward to the place where Stephen lay upon a woodea couch, and bent over him. His companion followed.

Stephen articulated his question in different words, with pain and difficulty. "Why have you brought me here? What do you want?"

The man looked down at him; his lips curled back in the travesty of a smile, but there was no accompanying gleam in the fine eyes, no contraction of the hundred little lines which surrounded them. He answered Lathom in perfect English, perfectly enunciated.

"Whe have brought you here, my friend," he said, "because it is not the custom of our race to bury our dead unavenged. What we require of you is satisfaction for the martyrdom of the murdered Hushmut Bisram."

"What do I know of Bisram ?"

"What do I know of Bisram ?" said Stephen with difficulty. "You have decoyed me here."

The man smiled again. "In your language your have a proverh, 'All is fa

LOVE-HOW THE FAMILY MAY HELP. THE COURSE OF TRUE

EVE OF AN ENGAGEMENT.

AID RENDERED TO THE GIRL IN LOVE.

Do girls receive assistance in their love-making, apart from that which shy, drooping lashes and coy, upturned glances are supposed to give? Yes, in many ways.

There is the mother, for instance. She assists, There is the mother, for instance. She assists, and very materially too, as everyone can testify. No one can arrange such nice little meetings as she, no one can show so unmistakably, yet withal so cunningly, that she understands the wooer's motives of constant attention, and that she expects him henceforth to act as a man.

She Descries the Mere Flirt.

Sho Doscries the More Flirt.

Woe be to the suitor who benefits not under her tuition. She can descry a flirt sooner than her daughter, and shows herself most severe if a man appears who loves and rides away. But after the engagement is announced she ceases to develop any plans for the satisfactory advancement of love matters. In some instances she deteriorates sadily, and actually goes back on her previous efforts. Then she earns for herself the envisable title of a "meddlesome mother," and eventually the high-sounding one of "mother-in-law," with a stress on the last two words.

The girls father is pressed into service, likewise. If not so much in evidence as mamma, he is an acknowledged "aider and abettor" in his daughter's affaire de court. He has a nice way of drawing a possible stition out, and chatting in a confidential manner, succeeding during the tête-à-tête in gleaning sufficient information to set all fears at rest respecting future prospects and present circumstances. Not that he goes point-blank about this business. Some fathers are born detectives, and extract these minor details in a manner wonderful and fearful to contemplate; yes, before the smitten swain is aware of any such intentions.

He does it innocently, too, and deserves for his cleveness not to be called a "spy."

Fathers as Match-Makers.

Fathers as Match-Makerrs.

There are people who declare papa to be guilty of match-making pure and simple, loading him with the honour (?) of being more expert at the art than the most anxious mothers. Perhaps he is not always so ambitious in a monetary senseas mamma, though a superfluous abundance of this world's wealth is by no means a fault in his paternal eye. A girl's brother renders valuable service. But pray do not run away with the iden that the "small boy" is here intended.

Oh'n or, those little good-for-nothings should be algorously excluded from all plans concerning love and lovers.

other.

He will cultivate the man's acquaintance, which is advantageous, as the suitor's private character will then reveal itself.

For, although any faults would soon show up of themselves, if the young couple agreed to an engagement, lovers are naturally deceifful in wishing to appear better than is truly the case; therefore, it is well to know something of one who aspires to so lotty a position, even if a little scheming is resorted to as a means to an end.

WHERE TO SPEND A PROFITABLE HOUR.

Novelties in bargains and bargains in novelties are not usually synonymous, but they are coming perilously near to being so. The first aim of a West End firm is to attract the passer-by by means of an alluring window display.

of an alluring window display.

Passers-by this week are not only attracted, but positively drawn inside by the ingenious devices of Gooch's Stores, in the Brompton-road. A window full of charming little novelties, royal-red glove and handkerchief-boxes, silver-mounted cut-glass flower vases, Chippendale backed gilt handmirrors, hairpin boxes, letter racks, delightful little cameo miniatures, photo frames of multitudinous designs, only form a tithe of the oddments so dear to the feminine fancy.

Everything in the window is ticketed at a figure no less attractive—§2d. au choix. Of course, there snow-white underclothing at equally perplexing low snow-white underclothing at equally perplexing low prices. Dressing-gowns and jackets stood about yearning for shoulders to rest upon. The first floor is the home of taillor-made costumes. The gentlemen's tailoring and hat departments are only of secondary interest to lady readers, but they will amply repay a little attention from fathers, husbands, or brothers.

The whole furnishing and decorating of the place is bright and comfortable, and lends a restful air of prosperity.

Remember the advice given on the Mirror Gala Day at the Crystal Palace all who go to this treasure house—don't push, don't crush, there's room for everybody.

BRIEF REMARKS.

Whaleboned petticoats are being very much used. Low shoes that button over at the sides have been reintroduced of late.

Tangerine is one of the new popular shades. It is the hue of an orange.

is the nue of an orange.

Fringed bias taffetas ruches are made into charming flat boas for evening wear.

A fancy has displayed itself for capes and three-quarter coats in large check tweeds.

Walking skirts that just touch the ground do not look well with long and tight-fitting jackets.

Broadtail velvet, which is really crushed velvet, is one of the coming materials for outer wraps.

Old-fashioned lavender silk, which brides of half a century ago were wont to revel in, is again be-coming fashionable.

Tartan tweeds are quite the latest for autumn tailor-made gowns in blue and green, brown and yellow, and quiet mixtures.

The owner of even a bit of real lace is nowadays making the most of her possession, for scarcely any costume is seen without some lace decoration.

A lace handkerchief makes an excellent jabot by being folded cornerwise, with the upper point turned so as to fall a little above the under one.

White, putty colour, and pale grey cloths make the smartest coats; and white cloth with a faint tinge of palest blue known as zinc-white is ex-tremely fashionable. Touches of colour are often admitted in the narrow cuffs and revers.

A prevailing autumnal fashion are the closely-fitting waistcoats. They are seen in delicately-embroidered muslins and cambrics, and as the season advances silk and broade will be seen in conjunction with smart little cutaway coats.

A FOOD CHRE

By the Scientific Food Grape-Nuts.

There is a lot of sweetness and happiness in this old world of ours if we but keep our health in harmony to respond to it.

What enjoyment is there in life when one is racked with pain, and the delicate nerves of the stomach and other parts of the body are all of a racked with pain, and the delicate nerves of the stomach and other parts of the body are all of a jangle?

We can best keep our health in proper tune by watching carefully the diet, and selecting foods which make rich red blood, and furnish the brain and nerves with their proper nourishment. The remarkable food Grape-Nuts is easy of digestion, full of nourishment, and furnishes to such a marked degree the phosphate of potash, which combines with albumen to make food for the brain and nerves, those delicate tissues which penetrate every part of the body. By its use many are restored to health who have tried without success other foods and drugs.

An extreme case and wonderful recovery is described in a letter from a woman living in Norwick. She says:—

"Nine years ago next November, I nearly lost my life through an uter on the stomach. I vomited nearly all the blood from my body, and lay at death's door for weeks, kept alive by sips of diluted milk (my stomach would not hold undituted milk), and ——'s esence. For five years following I dragged along somehow, when I was taken ill again and lay in bed three months from gastric uteers. This illness left my stomach in a worse condition than before. I lived somehow, and worked as well as I could. I changed my employment and went in the sales department of a shop, but I could not manage that, the standing was too great a strain, so I took to dressmaking again, paying more than I carned to doctors, and living on milk foods.
"I then heard of Grape-Nuts, and after a dreadful attack of pain and living without anything solid, I tried some Grape-Nuts on my factors."

on milk foods.
"I then heard of Grape-Nuts, and after a dreadful attack of pain and living without anything solid, I tried some Grape-Nuts for my breakfast, a teaspoonful with some luke-warm milk, and wonderful to even think about, it caused me no pain, and by degrees I began to alter. I have taken it ever since, and have not had such a good summer for nine years. I have tried all the digestive breads which have come under my notice, but could digest none of them.
"I am wonderfully well considering what I have gone through and suffered, for my case is far worse than the ordinary indigestion. You may know how thankful I am to have found a food that I can digest, and that is building up my strength and nerves. I can scarcely say enough about it."
Name given by Grape-Nuts Co., Ltd., 66, Shoelane, E.C.

Two vogues in tailor-made toilettes are now to be seen in Paris—the picturesque and the essentially simple. The second is the smarter fashion, and is illustrated above. The whole costume is carried out in the new colour, cog de roche, a reddish brown, worn with a black tie and black velvet hat plumed with the colours. The skirt and coat are equally simple in design, but beautifully cut. Its back view the picture also reveals.

ness from her eyes, brings colour to her cheeks, feels deliciously refreshed, and has the satisfaction of knowing that she is truly well-groomed.

She eats such foods as best keep the various digestive organs in good working order, avoiding the delectable pastries that create a yellow, sallow skin and dull, listless eyes, and preferring plenty of fresh fruit. She drinks a great deal of pure water to help to clear, cleanse, and beautify the skin.

At night there is a little facial rubbing that is never neglected. She cleanses away all the dust and grime that adheres to the surface of the skin by washing her countenance well with warm water and oatmeal, after which she rinses it in cold water, dries it gently with a piece of old linen, and applies a good skin food to her face. This takes the form of pure cold cream or almond oil.

The revived fashion for mounting precious stones in an invisible setting is illustrated by sets of safety-pins, each encrusted with a different stone arranged in rows.

is an ulterior object: Messrs. Gooch's have just rebuilt their premises, and yesterday opened two new departments—one for lancy goods and one for ladies' underslothing. The bargains in the underclothing department are no less surprising than at the fancy counter; but, alas' the event of the surprise of the surprise of the surprise of the goods, so that there are crowds of eager visitors, and before the end of the week Aladdin's dazzling treasures will have disappeared.

The premises themselves have been vastly improved in the rebuilding. Each department is a right-angles to the street, and has its own entries. First comes the boot and shee department; with an excellent stock of footwern of all descriptions. Next follow the two new departments: "the fancy department needs no further comment. The underclothing department is most castefully are ranged and decorated, but its contents are still surranged and the still surranged and decorated, but its contents are still surranged and s

MANNERS FOR MEALS.

What Children Should Not Do at Table.

"DON'T LAP YOUR SOUP."

Hitherto the English child's deportment has been much neglected. There are plenty of male and female Turveydrops who gravely tell the adult person how to enter a drawing-room with an air of bland distinction and how not to eat peas with a knife.

But the British boy and girl have been allowed to grow to maturity without anything in the shape of a printed guide to the proprieties. In France it is otherwise. The "Cornhill" has an amusing article based on "A little manual of politeness and savoir faire for the use of the young," written by a certain M. Quérolle. According to this the French young person has a good deal to learn in his or her early years. For instance:—

sarly years. For instance:

Salt is taken with the point of the knife, which you should be careful to clean by passing it through your bread.

When you are offered meat, vegetables, cream, or any other liquid, present your plate with your left hand, take what you want with your right, and bow your thanks.

Do not lap your soup or drink it out of the plate, use your spoon. If your soup is too hot, do not dream of blowing on it to cool it; stir it sweetly. And it is as ungenteel to blow upon other dishes as upon soup.

It is very unseemly to examine with close attention the contents of your neighbour's plate; to demand one portion rather than another, unless, indeed, you are invited to state your preference; or to smell what is offered you.

Don't Make Bread Bullets.

Don't Make Bread Bullets.

Nothing, we learn, is more ungented than to make builets of bread and hurd them at your little friends or others of the company, and to lick your knife, your spoon, or your fingers."

Nor should the French child "give too generations a view of the interior of his mouth," He should be "attentive not to speak with his mouth full," and must not "track bones and knock them on his plate to extract the marrow."

This is the eleventh commandment of the table: "By no means imitate those ungenteel gournands who pocket fuils, bonbons, and other little delicacies, and carry them from table."

There is, it seems, a whole book of etiquette as to sniffing, sneezing, and other operations. We are to conduct these with infinite precaution and regard for the feelings of other positions. We are to conduct these with infinite precaution and regard for the feelings of other positions and regard for the feelings of other positions of the stable stable specific to make a slight reverence, regarding the sneezer modestly."

It is also not good to "laugh in violent explosions, or to batter the ground with your feet, and twist your body."

"Shoes Should Be Kept On in Company."

If you are a boy you must not imjate the lack of gentility of certain gentlemen who stand with their backs to the fire with their coat-tails tucked up. You must never take off your shoes in company, "especially if there are persons present to whom respect is due."

respecting if there are persons present to whom respect is due."

We are warmed that it is highly ungenteel to withdraw the chair of a person who is about to seat himself, or to snatch away his handkerchief when he is about to use it. You must also "not make yourself a nuisance to the ladies and other persons by running round them, or otherwise circulating round them, or by passing lighted candles in front of them."

The necessary ablutions of a French child are very carefully pointed out. When he rises he is to "wash his face, eyes, mouth, and hands; comb his hair; cut his nails, and rub his ears."

Beyond that limited surface no duty is indicated. Apparently the bath is not an institution among the youth of France.

MONDAY RACING AT COLWICK PARK.

Pretty Polly's Journey to France-Imari's Running in the Nottingham Handicap.

NOTES AND SELECTIONS FOR TO-DAY.

Mr. W. Low's Imari, a horse backed at long ! prices to win a lot of money in the Cesarewitch, ran a public trial yesterday in the Nottingham Handicap, and at the end of this mile and five furlongs race finished third to Lord Penrhyn's Haresfield and Major Gordon's Karakoul. Imari, rather slow in the earlier stages, was running on very stoutly at the close.

Dean Swift is now apparently a firm favourite for the Cesarewitch. There is no lack of confidence among supporters of the second division, which includes Rondeau, Wargrave, St. Patrick's Day, and Roe O'Neill. The last-named is the choice of some of the shrewdest judges at Newmarket. Foundling has again been backed at shortening

A Fractious Favourite.

D'Orsay, Imari, Camphor, Karakoul, and Templemore were all preferred to Haresfield in the wagering on the Nottingham Handicap. D'Orsay was very much fancied on the strength of his running behind Catscradle at Newmarket, but he was beaten before a mile and a half had been traversed. This horse had been fractious at the post, and such fuming and fretting did mischief. Haresfield took command in the last quarter-mile, and had such running and tretting did miscalet. Haresheld took command in the last quarter-mile, and had little difficulty in keeping the ex-hurdle racer, Karakoul, at bay. Yquem had no quotation in the betting, and finished last. As the horse was passing at the finish a man, who suddenly popped out under the rails, nearly caused a bad accident.

Lord Howard de Walden won the Lenton Firs Plate with Marozzo, after a pretty race against Corcebus, the greatly-fancied Gorunna not being able to go the pace in the last furlong. Lord de Walden sends Zinfandel from Newmarket to-day to fulfil his engagement next Sunday in the Prix du Municipal. The colt will remain at Folkestone to-might, and cross to-morrow to Boulogne, en route for Paris.

Major Loder's arrangements for Pretty Polly are different. The filly will not leave Newmarket till Thursday. A special train will convey her to Folkestone in time to catch the boat to Boulogne. At the latter place another special will be in wairing, due to arrive in Paris on the same evening. The St. Leger heroine is fit and well, and granting ordinary leck in the journey she should maintain her great reputation in next Sunday's big race.

Crioket Scores.

Cricket Scores.

There was recent winning form to commend Cricket and Sea Log for the Castle Plate yesterday. The latter ran in disappointing style, whereas Cricket, always prominent in the field, got the better of Egyptian Beauty in a close finish. Thus Mir. Randali soon recovered the purchase money given for Cricket last week, and now bought him in for 230 guineas. This son of 5t. Frusquin has a tube in the throat, but is evidently smart. Madden, in riding Cricket, established his lead with 125 wins for the season, one in front of W. Lane. By the way, a message from Mr. R. R. Powler, the courteous clerk of the course at Lingfield, informs me that Lane continues to improve but very, very slowly. Madden might have increased his score it Little Dolly had had ordinary good fortune in the Bestwood Nursery. The filly was fractious at the post, and got away very badly, but made up her ground very fast. She swerved under the whip when asked to tackle Wise Love within the distance, and the latter won rather easily.

A two-year-old that can get a mile is worth having; and after the race for the Trent Selling Plate the filly by Manners—Winter Cherry, who won by three-quarters of a length, was the medium of some keen competition at auction. Mr. Charles Hibbert left off at 200 guineas, and she was knocked down to Mr. J. T. Wood for 20 guineas more. But the bidding was on behalf of Mr. Hallick. Manners, sire of the filly, was bought by the German Government, and is now standing at the Graditz study.

SOUTHAMPTON IN TOWN.

Saints' Poor Display Against West Ham at Upton.

MILLWALL BEAT 'SPURS.

Three Western League matches were played yes-terday, and all ended in somewhat unexpected re-sults. At Sheffield the hitherto invincible Wednes-day team were beaten on their own ground in a charity match, also a surprise.

The other day, in these notes, I expressed the opinion that the play of Southampton was not convincing. Yesterday I saw them at the West Ham club's new ground at Boleyn Castle, Upton, and was greatly disappointed. At the moment they are nothing like champions. Although reserves formed the greater part of the defence, it was not with this department that I was so muchi-nicined to find fault. The forwards were disjointed and weak, and there was little of that brillant combination we always expect to find in the Saints' attack.

we always expect to find in the Saints' attack.

Now and again, of course, there were glimpses of the form which has made Southampton one of the most consistent sides in the land, but only at intervals, and for the most part the work—especially in front of goal—was scrappy and lacked incisiveness. It is a most curious thing, but I have never seen Harrison—the Saints' champion goal scorer and centre-forward—play a good game. Four or five times last season I saw him, but he was always overplayed by the opposing half, and perhaps the worst display he gave during the whole season was against the North, when playing for the South, at Plumstend. Yesterday he seemed out of the piece alto-gether in the first half, and, although he "bucked up?" a good deal in the second period, he was not a great success. I may say at once that I know I am unfortunate, and perhaps a bit of a Jonah to Harrison, for his record proclaims him a first-class centre. I simply have not seen his good displays.

Hedley, the veteran of the side, and Bluff, a soldier recruit to the Saints, both worked very hard indeed at inside right and inside left respectively, but the outsides, Webb on the right and Mouncher on the left, were weak, and the last-named I thought frequently shirked his work when the attentions of Bamlett became too pressing. Webb showed a fine turn of speed, but failed to control the ball when under way.

The youngsters in the defence all did well. Lee, at right half, was the only old hand, and he played a capital game. Whiting, at centre half, showed sound judgment after a bad quarter of an hour at the start, during which Bridgeman nearly scored twice, Haxton, at left half, worked like a nigger, and showed plenty of pace and courage. He has the making of a high-class performer. Gordon and Hoave, at back, both kicked and tackled resolutely, and it was no fault of theirs that the verdict went against their side. Clawley, in goal, was not seen at his best, and in addition to punching the ball two or three times when he might have caught it he made two or three slovenly clearances.

West Ham started with rare dash, and whilst the Saints' defence was settling down might have scored two or three goals instead of the one which rewarded their efforts after five minutes' play. Once, Bridgeman, the centre-forward, only two yards out, failed to score from a centre by Flynn, Clawley just managing to hand the ball out to Gordon, who kicked it clear. Several times the "Hammers" got down, but failed to shoot straight. The goal came from a free kick, and was neatly headed through by Simmons.

Simmons was easily the best forward on the field. Playing at inside left he showed consummate judgment and wonderful control over the ball. Time and again he gave Flynn and Bridgeman splendid openings by drawing the defence, but after the first quarter of an hour the Southampton defence was very steady. Bridgeman was rather badly dazed in the first half in a collision, and was not quite so good as usual. McCartney, an old Scottish international, a very fat man, supplied plenty of low comedy, and was dubbed Hackenschmidt for a wrestling bout with Haxton.

The West Ham halves are all good, with Allison the star, perhaps. Bamlett, a dashing, fearless back, accomplished some brilliant work, and Gardner, his partner, although quieter, was quite as effective. The pair reminded me in their play of "Sandy" Tait and "Tiger" Erentz in the old days of the "Spurs, and that is saying a lot for the West Ham defenders. Kingsley in goal had very little to do. It could not be called a great game, but the better side won, and might have had another goal or so to their credit without hardship to the Southern League champions.

Following their defeat on Saturday at Tottenham, the 'Spurs, who had won all their previou matches in the Westen League, met with another faces, their old and keen rivals, Millwall, beating them after a rousing game at Millwall by 3 goals to 2. In the space of eight minutes four goals were scored—two each—but this, of course, could not last, and Millwall it was who secured the fifth and winning point. This was due to hesitancy or the part of Williams. Whilst the defeat will not de the 'Spurs a lot of harm, the victory will be in-valuable to Millwall, who had not previously were a match this season. I am pleased to see that Calvey ecored for the East Emeclub, and doubtless now that they have broken the ice, Millwall will once more become the "roaring lions" of the East Brentford, after their recent disasters, made drastic changes in their side at Bristol yesterday, and scored perhaps the most surprising Western League victory that has been recorded during the season. Like Milwall, they had not previously won a match, and I notice that Warrington, who scored against Portsmouth in the Southern League match on Saturday, obtained both of the points. CITIZEN.
